GW's Human Services & Social Justice (HSSJ) Program assists students in developing identities as leaders and professionals in nonprofit organizations, educational institutions and government and private agencies. Merging sociology, counseling, education and psychology, the program's interdisciplinary major, minor and combined degrees blend rigorous academic classwork with scholarly research and community practice. Students are empowered to work against injustice, discrimination and poverty while making a focused impact on their local communities.

The profession of Human Services emerged in the 1960's and initially focused on mental health, working with marginalized communities that included people of color, women, and people living with mental illness (Neukrug, 2008). The intellectual roots of Human Services drew from Social Work and Psychology, but over time expanded to include theories, research, and best practices from Education, Sociology, and Non-profit Management to better address the systems and contexts in which individuals and communities live, learn, and grow. By adapting and broadening its knowledge base, the field became more resilient and effective in fostering individual, organizational, and systemic well-being.

Social justice is the ultimate aim and vision of Human Services work; we define it as the “full and equal participation of all groups in a society that is mutually shaped to meet their needs” (Bell, 2007, p. 1). To accomplish this, we seek partnerships with the DC-area community through our community engaged scholarship programming. Hands-on service learning is central to the HSSJ Program, and we work with many nonprofit organizations, cultural institutions and government agencies. We combine theoretical and academic learning with practice so that students are prepared for their careers after graduation.
After graduation students have gone on to work for:

One hallmark of GW's HSSJ Program is the incorporation of community engaged scholarship, also known as service-learning in all required courses as a means to deepen student learning, address community-identified issues, and to weave theory, research, and practice together in relevant ways.

The Field of Human Services requires 300+ hours of fieldwork for students to develop not only the “know what” but the “know how”. These experiential learning experiences and their requirements vary course to course, depending on the specific learning objectives for the course.

What type of service do HSSJ students do?
HSSJ students do both direct and indirect service.
Direct: Assisting the partner sites with service provisions to their clients
Indirect: Assisting partner sites with research, grant writing needs, administrative tasks like fundraising, etc.

Can one site be counted for two courses in the same semester?
It is possible, as long as a student is doing different work or service at the site. For example, if a student is required to do 2 hours for child development, those 2 hours must be focused on child development. They can also use that site for nonprofit management, but they must have an extra 2 hours dedicated to nonprofit management.

How many HSSJ classes can I take in per semester?
We advise two classes per semester. However, three can be taken at one time after consulting with the HSSJ advisor.
When should I study abroad?
We suggest the spring semester third year as the opportune time to do so as it works best with our curriculum schedule.

What study abroad program fits best with the HSSJ major/minor?
Any program that meets your interests can be paired with HSSJ. However, not all coursework can be transferred back into the major.

What courses will transfer back into the major?
Typically our designated SOC elective courses, of which students must do 9 credit hours, are the simplest to transfer back into our major. However, students should consult with their HSSJ advisor for more information.
The HSSJ Program offers a combined Bachelor of Arts in HSSJ/Master of Public Administration degree in partnership with the Columbian College’s Trachtenberg School of Public Policy and Public Administration (TSPPPA). The 40-credit combined program allows students to complete 12 credits as part of the undergraduate studies, thereby completing the master’s degree on an accelerated timeline. BA/MPA students in HSSJ complete a one-credit-hour prerequisite course (PPPA 6000) during their junior year in preparation for master’s level coursework. BA students taking public policy and public administration (PPPA) graduate courses must work with a TSPPPA advisor in addition to their HSSJ advisor.
